The EPODB menu is easy to use but very powerful and flexible. Each command can be given a parameter that allows the user to define the number of times a command can be used within one movie, the timeout for the command (after which it will be automatically cancelled), and, of course, the text to be shown on the button. The EPODB menu allows the user to quickly and easily create menus for chapters, audio or subtitle streams.

Possible parameters for the EPODB command: * default: the default parameter value that will be used if the value of the parameter is not specified in the command itself; * value: the value of the parameter if not default, and in addition, it will display only if the option is active; * number: the number of times to execute the command; * time: the time after which the command will be automatically cancelled; * %text: the text to be shown in the button; * movie_frame: the current frame of the movie (by default, the frame with the current position of the current movie); * media_position: the current position of the media file (i.e., the file where the current movie is); * chapter: the current chapter; * audio: the current audio track; * sub: the current subtrack; * highlight: the currently highlighted section in the user interface. * subtext: the currently displayed subtext. Users:

Accessibility for Menus in BD-J titles for the blind and visually impaired: The menu commands in the BD-J titles are normally hidden, but are enabled by default. If the user presses the menu key (PS2: menu key "M") and then presses the menu button while an audio or subtitle stream is playing, the menu will be activated and the currently playing audio stream will be muted (it will be resumed if the user releases the button again). The menu is then activated again automatically every time the button is pressed. Support for Chapter Selections in the BD-J titles: Quick BD Menu allows the user to create buttons that will launch a menu to be displayed on the next screen and, of course, the menu to be displayed on the screen in which the user pressed the button. The user can select any chapter within a movie to display the menu. Pressing the menu button while the selected chapter is playing will automatically change the currently playing chapter to the selected
