To evaluate the ability of transcutaneous and transesophageal localised sonoelastography to differentiate malignant from benign lymph node metastases. In this prospective study, 53 patients with suspected lymph node metastases of early-stage lung cancer were examined. Transcutaneous sonoelastography was performed at the cervical lymph node metastasis and normal control points in the neck with high-resolution ultrasound. The results were compared with histology or follow-up sonography. Diagnostic accuracy of the different sonoelastographic parameters was calculated for transcutaneous sonoelastography and compared to that of clinical examination alone and conventional ultrasound. In addition, the diagnostic performance of different transcutaneous sonoelastographic criteria was compared to the transesophageal technique. In 11/53 patients (20.4%), transcutaneous sonoelastography revealed malignant changes in the cervical lymph nodes. The median size of the lymph node metastases was 3.3 mm (range, 1.5-8 mm) and malignant changes were found at metastases with a diameter of 2.5 mm or smaller ($p=0.01$). ROC analysis showed an area under the curve of 0.92 for the diagnosis of malignant lymph nodes by transcutaneous sonoelastography and 0.85 for transcutaneous sonoelastography combined with clinical examination. The sensitivity and specificity for transcutaneous sonoelastography were 100 and 90%, respectively. Diagnostic accuracy was significantly higher for transcutaneous sonoelastography ($p=0.02$) and transcutaneous sonoelastography combined with clinical examination (p

What's New in the Hi5 Toolbar?

This is the hi5 homepage link N/A hi5 The broad, long-term objectives of the parent grant are to study molecular regulation of skeletal muscle gene expression, to provide an understanding of the molecular mechanism(s) involved in skeletal muscle differentiation, and to identify factors that regulate the growth and development of skeletal muscle. To achieve these goals, a major emphasis is placed on the cloning and characterization of muscle-specific transcription factors and their transcriptional targets. A primary focus of this grant is to study transcription factors that regulate the expression of key genes involved in the developmental changes that occur in skeletal muscle. The specific aims of this application are to isolate and characterize a cDNA encoding a muscle-specific transcription factor, M1. Characterization of this gene will allow determination of the specific role of M1 in the process of skeletal muscle differentiation. Very nice coffee tables and gorgeous sofas. And everything is for sale. Prices from 50 and up. I got a call from a woman that she was selling a coffee table she bought from the previous owner. She offered to give it to me for $50. I asked her what size the coffee table was and she said "6 feet by 3 feet". The coffee table was $150. I am curious if the lady was offering me the table for 50 dollars or if it was priced low just to give away the table to me. If someone has the coffee table could you please respond to me so I can figure out what to do with the table.Q: Setting variable to equal to result of division of two other variables I'm struggling with setting a variable in C. The code I have is: #include #include int main() { float num1; float num2; float res; printf("Enter first number: "); scanf("%f", &num1); printf("Enter second number: "); scanf("%f", &num2); res = num1 / num2; printf("Result: %f", res); return 0; } But, when I try to store the
